THAT SEWING MACHINE.

There have been two or three more or less extended notices of a model sewing machine which has been on exhibition in this city by the inventor, and to which the attention of our capitalists has been called. The inventor, Mr. D. Keeler, has spent five years of time and a small fortune in perfecting what he deems to be the finest, and beyond all question the least complicated machine ever invented. It is of standard or table size, capable of making 1,500 stitches per minute, and sew perfectly any character of cloth, of any thickness, and with the fewest possible chances of getting out of order. It has thirteen patents covering its various parts. Yesterday a traveling man stepped into the back room of what is commonly known as a drug store and was ordering the drinks for rheumatism. Before he had taken all his medicine, a gentleman who has been a resident of this city for some years appeared in the room afflicted with the same disease, and applied for a similar remedy. While the medicine was being prepared, he spied - the traveling gentleman who be knew "too well," as he termed it, in an eastern city. The question of protecting the curbing and guttering now being put down in the city is being agitated to a considerable extent. It does not seem wise to the majority of those heard speak of the matter that wagons should be allowed to run over it or that horses should be left standing where they will be but little better than if common cobble stone had been used.
